on a 2 TB (as of right now) we take home about 4TB of data. I'm not sure what the exact use case is but I would seriously consider a RAID 10 setup in that case to save on those space-conscious days. The reason why I say 4TB is that this is only the first 2 hour of our video, which means we are missing roughly another 4TB of data, which I figure is roughly 4/6th to 7/10ths of total data transferred. $ dd if=/dev/sdb of=/mnt/stor/SNAP.2.3.2016_16-23-49-01/data.2.3.2016.avi bs=1k seek=2 dd: reading `/mnt/stor/SNAP.2.3.2016_16-23-49-01/data.2.3.2016.avi': Input/output error $ sudo dd if=/dev/sdb of=/mnt/stor/SNAP.2.3.2016_16-23-49-01/data.2.3.2016.avi bs=1k seek=4 dd: reading `/mnt/stor/SNAP.2.3.2016_16-23-49-01/data.2.3.2016.avi': Input/output error $ Time to research, implement and test. Edit The file was corrupted during download at a fraction of our total data usage. Also I guess the time stamp in the name of the file is just not accurate. That's why I asked for users to specify which point in the video they want to get/download. The timestamp in the file name was added by me as a caption for the video. I'm unable to remove that during recovery, but looking at the old data, I think I'm getting the latest version of the data and dropping the oldest one when I'm done. The other option would be a binary search if you have multiple points with different time stamps in the name of the video file. A: I will attempt to answer the question I asked. The video was corrupted during download and not at any point during storage. I was able to recover the video file and the recovery of the file resulted in a file about 8GB smaller than the original file. I'm not sure if I will Umbelliferone is converted via glucuronide conjugation in vivo to 4-hydroxycinnamic acid, which is further metabolized to glucuronic acid conjugates. In urine, sulfate and glucuronide conjugates of umbelliferone and 4-hydroxycinnamic acid have been detected. In addition, the sulfate conjugate of 4-hydroxycinnamic acid is the only human metabolite found to date in plasma after oral administration of umbelliferone. In peripheral tissues, umbelliferone and 4-hydroxycinnamic acid are both converted to glucuronide conjugates. This results in the appearance of the glucuronide conjugate of umbelliferone as the major metabolite in hepatic and peripheral tissues. 0cc13bf012
