Basically, it will: Block all PopUps except those that are defined in an XML or Text file That file defines which PopUps to block, and which types to use (raw HTML, Greasemonkey script, etc.) Users that have Ad-Blocking enabled in their browser, will never see annoying PopUps Users that are not Ad-Blocking enabled will see the AdBGone logo or a solid background with AdBGone logo over it. AdBGone Install: First, you must have the FF3 repository installed. To install, open Firefox (I recommend using Firefox 3 with the Greasemonkey 2.0 RC1), go to Addons -> Manage Installed addons, and click on the checkbox next to the "Repository on Firefox Extensions", then hit "Install Now", and restart. Ad-Blocking is enabled by default in the FF3 core, and this is your first step. For Ad-blocking to function, you should also make sure that you have the correct filters installed. Go to Options -> Advanced -> Filters -> Add Filters..., search for "Adblocking", and install the filter. You may want to install the "AdwCleaner Plus" filter as well, if you find that your filters are either very limited in what websites they block, or don't block them at all. AdBGone Config: Once Ad-blocking is enabled, you will need to open the file that defines your PopUps to block, and the type of PopUps to use when they appear. You can either use a text file, in which case the config text will look similar to this: 1 1 1 If you used an XML file, it will look like this: 1 1 1 In any case, simply copy the text, save it to your computer, and rename the filename to Adbloc.txt I will discuss the process of setting up this file below. If you do choose to use an XML file, Ad-Blocking will work automatically, and you
