Pancreatic cancer is the fourth leading cause of cancer death in Western countries and its prognosis is very poor. There is still no consensus regarding the optimal approach to the diagnosis of malignant pancreatic neoplasms. We retrospectively reviewed the clinical records of 23 patients who underwent laparoscopy for suspected pancreatic cancer between January 1998 and June 1999. A total of 14 patients (60.9%) had an histologically confirmed diagnosis of pancreatic cancer. The remaining nine patients (39.1%) had an endoscopic procedure, five of which were not associated with diagnosis. In 19 cases, the tumour was found in the head of the pancreas, and one patient showed it in the uncinata. Seventeen patients were asymptomatic, three patients showed abdominal pain and three patients had weight loss. There were no intra-operative complications. The average time for the laparoscopic procedure was 139 min (range 85-216). The laparoscopic procedure was associated with a satisfactory diagnostic accuracy. Our data show that laparoscopy can be a useful diagnostic tool in the staging of patients with suspected pancreatic cancer.Xanthohumol, a prenylated chalcone from the hop plant, inhibits formation
