Q: How do I generate a random number in Java and return it to the main class? Im trying to make a quiz in a project. I want to generate a random number and store it and then use it later in the project. I know how to generate a number, but how do I store it and then return it to the main class? A: There are a couple of ways to do this. The most straightforward is to just create a static integer constant in your main class: public class Main { private static final int RANDOM_NUMBER = r.nextInt(10); // do stuff with `RANDOM_NUMBER` //... } Alternatively, you can store the result in a static Map for example (and create the map when you start your app/applet): public class Main { static Map numberPool = new HashMap(); static { numberPool.put(RANDOM_NUMBER, new Void()); } // do stuff with `RANDOM_NUMBER` //... } Another interesting way would be to write your own Random class that generates random numbers: class Random { private final RandomPool pool; public Random(RandomPool pool) { this.pool = pool; } public static RandomPool createPool() { RandomPool pool = new RandomPool(); return pool; } public int nextInt(int n) { RandomPool pool = createPool(); return pool.number(); } } // then replace new Random() with new Random(R.createPool()): A: You should use a random number generator, you can search for them on the net. There is also a class called java.util.Random But if you just want to generate a random integer using Math.random() you can also do that, but you should

Application of an on-chip thermopatterning technology using poly(dimethylsiloxane) for patterning of living cells. We demonstrate a novel patterning technology for poly(dimethylsiloxane) (PDMS) for patterning of living cells. The patterning is carried out using a thermoplastic PDMS mold, called polymer on mold (POM), that contains micro-patterns of different surface energies at the interface with the PDMS. During the cell patterning, the patterned PDMS is bonded to a living cell. The patterned PDMS can be easily separated from the living cells by incubating them in a low-concentration organic solvent. Cell patterning processes are extremely simple and highly cost-effective. Furthermore, as the patterned PDMS can be used repeatedly for cell patterning, this technology is also highly applicable to high-throughput screening of a large population of cells..556555E+01 4.002202E+01 1.556529E+01 4.002088E+01 1.556500E+01 4.002065E+01 1.556444E+01 4.002031E+01 1.556336E+01 4.001992E+01 1.556283E+01 4.001932E+01 1.556235E+01 4.001883E+01 1.556201E+01 4.001825E+01 1.556135E+01 4.001768E+01 1.556103E+01 4.001706E+01 1.556086E+01 4.001654E+01 1.556065E+01 4.001608E+01 1.556046E+01 4.001560E+01 1.556028E+01 4.001522E+01 1.555985E+01 4.001486E+01 1.555941E+01 4.001452E+01 1.555896E+01 4.001418E+01 1.5558
