Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of restoring co-existing web signals of different conduction velocities, and more particularly to a method of automatically identifying web signals of different conduction velocities and restoring the web signals of different conduction velocities. 2. Description of the Related Art An inkjet head in a printer makes a print result by ejecting ink onto a sheet of printing paper. According to the dots and lines formed on the sheet of printing paper, the print result is determined. However, an ink ejection velocity of the inkjet head varies due to long-term use or frequent re-inking, and the print result printed on the sheet of printing paper is distorted due to the low printing velocity. In order to solve the problem of the distortion caused by the low printing velocity, a method of restoring the distortion of the print result by ejecting a lot of ink and thus achieving a proper density of dots and lines on the sheet of printing paper is generally used. In the inkjet head of the printer, ink is ejected at a high velocity and is collided with the sheet of printing paper to form small dots and lines on the sheet of printing paper. Since there is high energy when the ink is collided with the sheet of printing paper, the ink ejected at the high velocity is apt to be collided with the sheet of printing paper. Hence, it is difficult to make precise dots and lines on the sheet of printing paper, and since the ink is apt to be collided with the sheet of printing paper, the sheet of printing paper may be destroyed. In order to solve the problem caused by the ejected ink at the high velocity and the collision with the sheet of printing paper, since the ejected ink does not reach the sheet of printing paper, and the collided ink is
