"As far as we know, FIFA has been the only game available that uses this technology, and it's our job to make this technology the best it can be for players and clubs," said Ralf Rangnick, Executive Vice President of Marketing and Communications, Electronic Arts. "Players have shown interest in being able to try it out before the game launches and already our players have made some impressive improvements to their game by using this technology on live FIFA servers." "FIFA 22 is the biggest iteration of the FIFA franchise ever, with an unprecedented level of innovation that brings the action and excitement from the pitch to the living room," said Alex Leach, Head of Studio at EA Canada. "Combining the virtual players from our FIFA universe with the Motion Scan technology is a truly great experience, especially for those of us who are soccer players ourselves. We hope our FIFA community enjoys all of the new features and improvements, and we can't wait to share this unique game experience with the world."
