, the resulting market trajectory. Doing so will expose you to the complexities and the risk of trading. To make a modest impact, you might need to invest $100 to $1000 (or more!) in an ETF to make a few hundred dollars a month. You will need discipline, and at the end of the day you may still end up with a loss, but hopefully in a year or two that loss will amount to much more than you put into the investment. Don't invest too much and don't invest too little: find your "Goldilocks". In early 2015 I started following a popular investment website called "Finance Wisdom". I liked the idea of reading about the best ways of investing and learning more about this process. However, the "book" was so expensive and so tedious that I had to abandon the idea of buying it. Instead, I started reading the free version of their books on line. They are moderately expensive books and the free versions are not as in-depth or detailed as their paid version. I started off reading books by well known authors like Warren Buffett, but I quickly got my interests in the field focused on the field I actually dealt with in the real world and this was an occupation that required a unique set of skills and knowledge. So I started to seek out informational books on specific topics in the field of finance. The topics I choose were: 1. How to use the stock market to acquire assets (as a billionaire) 2. How to analyze asset valuations (as a professional investor) I found a few books that I still read, but mainly for information and inspiration, but none (that I remember) that I started to follow as I am sure as one reads several books (from the same author) on a particular topic they soon develop a preference towards one or two. Like any other professional activity you will go through periods when it feels that you are making little progress and others when you feel that you are moving forward at a dramatic pace. But at the end of the day, I will always be the fortunate that I can call myself a living example of how investing is a process of self-improvement. 8 thoughts on "Self-Improvement in the Financial Market" Your email address will not be published. Update: Amazon is now reporting that the selection of Bezos for TIME's Person of the Year is the result of our Best of 2017 Readers' Poll, which you can take a look at here. Jeff Bezos is the man we love to hate, love to love and the subject of debate for 2017. A constantly changing figure in the tech world and the owner of a multi-billion dollar company, the notorious love-hate-love that he's often caught up in when it comes to us, the internet's most influential figures is the focus of the ongoing quest for this year's Person of the Year. If we were given a choice, we'd go with Donald Trump. He's the target of so many memes, so many jokes and is one of the most visible figures in all of the conversation around politics, but isn't technically a political figure. So really it's the internet's natural opposition which has in turn proved to be beneficial to the Trump campaigns. And there are some other factors that round out the group we'd like to nominate. The nominee with the least deserving rise was Steve Jobs. He wasn't as influential as Donald Trump, but if it wasn't for him, we'd be talking about flat screens now, an outcome which no one would have even conceived of. What are you guys' nominations? The Time Person of the Year is selected by TIME's editors, based on the list we receive from you, our readers. Write to Megan Gannon at megan.gannon@time.com.Q: Adjacent dashes using Material UI I'm using Material UI to create a React component that can render text blocks with a dash and a set dash-spacing. As indicated in the Material Design guidelines: The rule of thumb is that dashes should be placed next to one another, by at least one space, and with no spaces between dashes, except for between a pair of adjacent dashes. As such, dashes should be spaced equal to or greater than a single letter space. I was trying to adapt their sample code, but I've been having no luck, because I'm not sure how to set the spacing between dashes. In the docs, they only make reference to using css, but I don't see how to reference the spacing between dashes. So I tried this: `const navStyles = { container: {}},`
