A: Your dongle has been broken. There is a very slight possibility that it is possible to get the cracked dongle to operate on a different version of Windows (some people have told me they have achieved this), but I can't see any reasons why you should want to do that. Many of the benefits of cracking a dongle depend upon the dongle being able to identify the user who installed it. By making it work on a different version of Windows, you lose this benefit. Make a note of the date, time, and version of Windows that you tested your dongle with. If that doesn't help, you are going to need to get another dongle.

Q: Flex/Flash: How do you check for a null in an e.result? I have a Flex mobile app and for debugging purposes, I'd like to write a trace statement to check to see if the event was successful. I'm just waiting on a large data query and want to make sure that it hasn't returned null. Here's an example: `if(myData == null){ trace("ERROR: Couldn't get data from DB"); }` How do I check in the if statement to make sure the event returns a result?

A: I hope that you're checking for "null" in a DataGrid (or similar), right? If you have an MXML component, you should extend the MXML Component to override the protected getResult function. Then, do whatever you need to do to check the result within getResult and return null. That way, you can test for null and handle errors gracefully.
